1981, Imelda Marcos, then First Lady to her husband, President Ferdinand Marcos, decided to have an international film festival come the following year. Construction of the Manila Film Center was planned soon after. The construction was rushed to complete the lobby of the center in 72 hours rather than the week required.

November 17, 1981, a scaffolding collapsed, trapping 169 workers in cement for over nine hours.

Rumors spread that the workers were abandoned, protruding limbs chopped off and covered with cement in order to proceed with construction as scheduled.

Update report.

Found archive of a 2005 episode of i-Witness that featured the Manila Film Center.

As it is quite an old legend with no notable new stories, there is no urgency to investigate. However, in my personal opinion, I believe it would be valuable to consider studying this in person.

If possible, I would like to see if the writings (shown in the screenshot attached in the collected data) are still there and if there are any added messages. Is it possible to collect samples of the material used to write the messages?
